MY RICH UNCLE.

Why the Nephew Never Missed His "Lost Expectations."

My innate idea of a rich nucle was a bland old gentiuman, with tipa-f. c. soveroignsat his fingers' ends. Experience corrected that. Asked et a school samminetion the derivation of tha torm "curnudgeon," I answered, unbesitatingly, "Uncle Dick."

He had quarreled with my mother—his darling sister-for marryleg a Frunchman and never seen her since. lie lived unmar ried, and sione. My mother, long widowed, had partially recovered the loss of a tonder husband, never this estrangement from e cruel brother. It embltters it two lives, no to say three. Ho had tacity accepted me as his helr, expressly, I know for the please as his noir, expressly, I knnw for the pleasure of plaguling me to denth heforehand.
Two annual visits I paid him at Hamerton Grange. Conculve a young Daniel, condenned twice u year to cast himself into a lion's den. Each time I escaped alive, only by miraclo, I felt sure. One morning my mother received e letter lu his hindwriting.
Its permeal so excited her that I foolishly dream he hed releuted. Her toess andocrived me.

hiding her face, "prepare for the very worst!"

"What! is he dead or dying!" I inquired, thoughtlessily—I was only nineteen.
"Dying! No such thing! Lives to defraud you—my poor, innoceast boy. Robbed of your own—your all! Dick, what monstrons revenge is this! He's going to be married," she explained.

"Is that ail!" said!, like the elucompoop I am. She read alond:

"The lndy, Miss P. Cella Watson, is twenty-six, of excellent Americee linenge. Her father was formerly commander of the constantiary, and died in the diplomatic service et Unionapolis. Her mother was a lloward, connected with certain leading familles among our old nobility. Miss Watsun is a lady of culture and relinement well worthy to share my naue. I think it my duty to rapprise you of an event that touches yoe so neerly. My dephew is welcome to come uext month, as usual. I shall even be happy to see him at the ceremony on the 31st proximo."

Hers she broke down, sobbleg esrvously, "Inselt heaped upoe injury. I believe you always mennt to, Dick."

"Inselt heaped upoe injury. I believe you always mennt to, Dick." Suddenly she looked up with a gleam of you always meant to, Dick."

Saddonly she looked up with a gleam of inspiration.
"I don't believe she's a lady—or American. She never was christened Cella. She's a day. Diplomatic service. Uniouapolis—why, that's whore our former solicitor, Hopkins, emigrated to. Pil write to him for full particulars about Miss P. Colin Watson."

The appronching University boat race swemed then to me of mere consequence thin the antecedests of my future aunt. Fivs weeks inter my visit to Hamerton Grauge fell due. That morning arrived the answer from Unionapolis.

"This excoods my brightest hopes," confessed my mother, ms she read."
"Miss Watson's all right thee," said I, ineocently. With foed, pitying look she replied:
"David, give yoer necle this letter. He stands see the verge of a precipice—this will save him. He who said I disgraced him hy mnrrying a D'Aebigny! You may read it, David."

him hy mnrrying a D'Aebignyl You may readit, David."

"No, thank yon," said I, pocketing the documest. I seemed to feel it there like a red-bot coal. Pleusant, carryleg a bomb as a weddieg present for an eecle like Dick! It was a two heurs' journey to Hamerton with a change at Pidcot. Absorbed in Punch, I harely noticed my fellow-passeegers—three sindles, see young, and nn elderly cleric. I thought we must be nearleg Pidcot, when the carriage began jerking ie an extraordinary maeeer. Unpleasant, short, sharp whistles sone ded. Suddeely the young indy oppsite fining herself on the back sent beside me, stondying her feet against the woodwork. "Sit still," she said, "it'll he smash directly."

One moment I spent in no-mae's land. What happened, I never exactly knew. The next' thing I was aware of was my asighbor's voice saying:
"We're all right now."

I opeed my dased eyes. Human forms jammed together, broken glass, spilinters, bid gentlemen inseesihle, citi ladies hricking, blood stroaning from a cut in some body's bend. Horror paralysed me; not se my fair companioe."

my fur companies.

"Cyen the door," she end.

"It's locked," I objected.

"Lost your railway key! Take mine."
I obeyed, end we extricated the pareon who was beginning to recover. "Lost your rnilway key! Take mine."
I obeyed, end we extricated the pareon, who was beginning to recover.
"More frightened than hurt," she decided. "Get some brandy." Then, as I gazed helplessly adown the ditch, she added: "Don't you see the tavern sign behind those trees! Rou." I ran. When I returned she had hound up the cnt, quieted the hystorical ladies, and was looking at hor watch. "I shull miss the Humerton train," she said. "Get my traveling bag out of the carriage, please." I got it. Nobody seemed renly injured, but the line was hopolessly blooked for hours. "How far to Pideoti" she asked of the gunrd. "Six miles. Oue could drive that in time."

"If only cash grew wild, like those primroses!" I eighed. "Humerton is my destination, too."

"I see n spring-cart in the tavern shed, and horses in the field. Come across. Perhaps we can talk them into putting to,"
And, hy energetic porsunsions, she actually induced somebody to drive us—she kindly offered to take me—to Pideot for a consideration. I hesitated, thinking the coesiderntion excessive.

"That's no concern of ours," she reminded me, "churge it to the company."

Before our feliow passongers had well resilized their souls and hodice still helonged togethor, we two were half way to Pidot, I axpressing boundless ndmiration of har cool intrepidity.

"O," she remarked, "I was in a bigger smash once, in the Statee."

States! I started. A fair American, boued for Hamerton.
"By nil the lawe of likelihood, my future aunt, Mise Walson," I suruleed, squinting at the initins of her hug, which seemed not to correspond.

"I see what you're doing," she said.

"I see what you're doing," ahe said.
"They'ro not mine yet, but they will be.

Ahal Now was I master of the situation.
"Might I know the fortunato man's name!"
I saked.
"Elchard. "Elchard." "Richard Grimston, of Hamarton

Grange."

"A man of fortune, too, eb!"

"Why, certainly," she refolesd, "You don't suppose a pauper would come proposing to me!"

"Your senior, surely—considerably!"

"Twenty-five years. You needn't call it a quarter of n century, you know. And I fancy he can look in the gless with hoya as young as you, and take the shine out of some."

I winced. My uncle was a remarkably handsome, nthistic man, beside whom i seemed n mere shrimp. "Testy temper, people say!" I observed.
"Well, he's had a bad time, I expect," shn replied, "with poor relations leitering, longing to step into the dead man's shoes. Vulturea. What makes yoe fidget so!"
"The cart josties so," I apulogized, half hursting with secret fury.
"I hato perasites," she rosumed. "His little whipper-snapper of a uephew is rightly served. He reckoned on having the old man to fleece living, and forget when he'd huried him and grasped his possessioes.

I grasped Hopkins' letter in my pocket, my revenge, my most precious possession just then.

"Yon've epolied his reckoulng," I re-"Yon've epolied his reckoulng," I remarked, playfully.
"So perish all fortune hunters!" she returned, likewise. "Pidcot Junction. Here we are. Just in time."

The crowded state of the train precluded further confidences. At Hamertoe, es I saw her off in the only cah, she produced her card, saying:
"You'll be looking infer year leggage here to-morrow. Yoe might look after mine nucle have it sent up."

I promised complience as d sterted to walk to my nucle's.

As I sighted the gates of Hamerton Grange I cerved myself for the orden of pleasing sensations I—as heir-presumptive—was regularly subjected to.

There was en odious mongrel cur—the oely creature my uncle loved—whose hite was worse than Its hark, which was atrocions. Hearing the distant music, I drew on the thick gloves I provided expressly, and prepared for eveste by asticipation.

I shall struggle to the door, Uncle Dick enjoyling my tornent behind some blind; I stand, warding off the beast with ee chand, pummeling the door with the other—the bell-wire had been broken these two years. Prosectly Mrs. Pike, the housekeeper, putting her head out of door, as if to repel a thief, admits me by n chink, under protest. Uncle receives me, in a chilly sitting-room mud a hideone drossing-gowe I detest. Crossing the threshold, I trip upon an old established hole in the carpet. He compliments me on my graceful deportment, isquires when last I was ilogged, or plucked, end so on, with characteristic anilability. My mother's existence is ignored. We sit down to a comfortiess meal of cold pork or belied mutton. No wine is served. If a cigar is offered, I know it is a pedidious trep to convict me of premature habits of dissipatioe. After dinner we play chess. Woe te mo if I win—I cheat; if I lose, I'm an lidot, sot worth checkmating. At tee I am ordered to hed. Should I try to forget my esund over enovel, his curfew knock soos warm me to desist.

That bark came no nearer. By some mistake they had forgottsm to lot. Fairy losse. Feurful lest they should recollect, I hurry to the door, hammer away, end vest my spite on the dumb bell-handle. Horror It roused a peal to weke the doad. Just my linck! It had been mended.

A parlor maideu, with a protty figure, opeued the doors wide. I centry faleted.

"Has auything happened to Mrs. Pikel" I stammered.

"On on; sir," Phyllis replied. "I'm her nelee, come to help clean np."

"Time you did, "thought I, enterieg, but stopping short at the spectacie of Uecle Dick stalking Into the hall to Rie was quito chatty, quito jolly! You soon get over pleasant surprises, but more wonders were coming. An excellent dlener first—chumpagne, which I declined, mistaking it for e snare. He insisted. I earrated my railway adventere and encounter with his fisuce, extelling her courage aed nerve. He rolated the history of his courtship. Russlege had made the match. It was his fed, then as Mrr. Pierpont, who had latoly rented Humertoe Court Manor, had discovered. Business correspondence had led to personal relatioes, and whilst the mother discoursed learnedly of slios, the aloty rented Humertoe Court Manor, had discovered. Businesse correspondence had led to personal relatioes, and whits the mother discoursed leurnedity of silos, the daughter's eyes shot the dart that disinherited Devid D'Aubigny. The evesleg passed raphily. A cheerful fire was hurning in my bed-room. Eleven o'clock foend me lounglug over it, unadmonished. Out upon the old proverh about silk purses and sows'enrs. Glory to Miss P. Celin Watson, who had done it—tauned the tiger, smoothed the porcupinn. What angol aent l—Suddenly Hopkins' letter orackled in my pocket, reminding me I was here to brenk the engagement. Cella was no angol, but a precipice. Although this marriage impoverished me, my feeling was of nequalified disappointment. What good had my "uxpectations" ever done me! Fifty thousand pounds' worth of worry uncle would get out of me hefore I reelized n jot.

What was the obstacle! Why was Celia us worthy to become my aunt! Cossumed with curiosity, I took the leave gives to purues Hopkins' letter. Instlectively I fastened directly on the fatal passage.

"Petor Watson, of the Loudon police, left the force from III-health and emigrated to Uniouspolis. He opesed a stors ned supplied the hurracks " " Hs married the daughter of a haker—Howard, from Gunter's, London—and they had ose daughter, Celin. Watson died the next year, aed his widow married Plerpoet, a hall-dresser, since deceased, who deserted her." I got us further. Policeman Pnetry-cook! Hnir-dresser! I tore round the room excitedly. He, the soni of family pride, had been guiled by two advanturesses, misrepresseutieg themselves as well born. Hideous coespiracy—opportunely defented. He, who seconed a D'Auhigny as an inferior! Exhausted, I returned to my armediar.

Yet, as passion subsided, I felt that regretful pang again. Usole, sonred by dissechantment, would hecome absolutely le tolerable, I forosaw. Next time! came to Humerton there would be two savyange dogs to fly at my legg, no servant at all, perhans. I should have to make my owe bed, diee off

Next mornleg nt broakfast, uncle looked up from reading my tutorie report, forwarded from bome, eavlug unsuspicionsly:

"Your mother snys you brought a letter She had given no hint, not the slightest preparation.
"I was just going to give it you," I said resolutely. "Herostis."

CHAPTSE LIT.

Two hours later I presented myself at Miss Watson's, with her tranks, which I had fetched from the station. I foundher nione, and promptly introduced myself as hor intended usphew.

Slie gave me a comic stare.

"Welf, I never, never—could have believed yon'd be so nice."

"You fetter," I murmured, ironically.

"Nice to me—you've no cause. I guess you coseld have done without a new aunt at this time of day."

She snved you trouble, this girl, I was pussling how to approach the thoray subject. She stepped streight into the hram blee.

"How happy should I be to call you so," anid I, sarcastically. "But for that, you may have noticed that Mr. Grimsten is a very proud man."

"As Lacifer," ahe rejoined, "who, I'm suro, was Eeglish himself."

"He disowned my mothor for marrying a D'Aubigny. No Frenchman, according to hie creed, would be an Englisb gentleman's equal."

"It's the rule," she said, coolly. "Your father was the exception, I suppose."

"And do you suppose," I exclaimed, enraged, "that he ever would have solidited your hand had he known the social standing of your father, the policeman; your grandfather, the confectioner; your stopfather, the hairdresser of Unionapolis!"

Her staro was tragio now. Her cheek paled. She trembled.

"You're joking," she faltered, boarsely. I sprang up exultant.

"Nay, denial is useless. This letter," placieg these historien! facts beyond dispute, "arrived yesterday in time to frustrate the imposition."

With n "What!" of wild dismay she santehed the letter, read, shuddered, annk together, fain ty ejaculating, "Lost!"

"Wretched girl!" I shouted. "Which are wiltures, pray! We, his kindred, or you.

"Step, Mr. David," she implored.
As well might she have cried: "Whoa!" to n runawey firs engine."

"Little whippersnapper of a nephew—dead mee's shoes! Peraaltes!"

"Mercy," she entrented.

"Su perish all fortune hunters!"
She seized both my hands, saying: "Be silent and listen," so authoritetively that I cheyed—as though she were my auet, indeed.

"My mother is the cause of this. Sho is n beeutiful character, hut she's get what they cell an orieutal imagination. Bhe chjocts to giving plaie things their right names. I'm nsed to hear her call a poetilion a cavalier, dish-covera cupolas, n temporary jug a flagoe, a street fight a duel, but this was carrying things too far! "Can yen poesihly mean." I asked, be wildered, "that these—dicclosures—take her dengater by surprise—that you helinve yourself of geutle birth?"

"Of course I did," ahe replied, simply. "How should I know better! True, once since up engagement she dropped n laht in her exuitation that excited my suepicious. She hid her face.
I stood over my annt that was to have been, feeling almost tall and quite heroic. Now for n reveuge, eow for coals of fire.
It was a giorious moment.
"Cella," I said, "it may not be too late. Listen. Touched hy the aunshine your influence has brought into my uncle's life, I,—withheld that letter—gave him one about ensitage instead. He suspects nothing. The frank confassion is still yours to minke."

"Worthy nephsw of your uecle," she cried, ietending e compliment. "I'll thauk you efterwerd. He man't fied you here. This way—quick."

I harely disappeared through one door as my uncie entered through she other, concerned to fied his betrothed in tears.

"My dear Cella," he began, so tendsrly that I must peep through the key-hole to cortify it was uncie speeking, "this wretcaod accidest has affected your uerves."

"The train was upset, but it takes more to ujust me," she sohhed. "I wish I'd heen cut to pleces; I do. Is would heve spared me what I mind worse, end you would have regretted me. Say yon would, Richard."

"Colla, dearest love," here I nearly betrayed myself by starting eed yeifing, "weat have I doee to provoke this strange reception!"

"Unr marriage," she sald, with desperato dignity, "can eot take place."

Beld my uecle, with frowns in his voice: "This jesting, Csila, is Ill-timsd; I don't understand."

"Weit, end—you—will," she faltered. "A terrible family secret, carefully kept from me hitherto. Circumstacese over which I had eo coetrol materially affecting our coudition."

"Pecuniary circumstances!" he euggested. "You mean your fortune was oversteted. Your mother's liberal expeediture has led her into deht!"

"It's worse than debts," she declared, paused, then ennounced, solemnly: "Blots oe oer escutcheon generatious can eot efface."

"A family skeleton," be began uneasily, trying to laugh. "That's hed."

"Worst than the worst you cae imegine."

"Not a crime!" he mettored, startied.

"Worse than n crime," she efilrmsd.

Hereupou he rose impetiestly, saylug:
"Dearest Cella, I think you have got concussion of the hrain."

"Not I, she returned, mourafully, "It's my mother's where the screw is leose. Don't blame her before me, Richard. Shis is romeutle—she has mieled you about on origin by using high soending language. "The daughter of a eminent public func-tionary, and of a collateral descendest of the Nortolk Howards is no unfit match, even for Richard Grimston."
"He was a siesple policemne," she schbed, "He was a siespie policemne," she schbed,
"In England; a storekceper in America.

There was a tremendous pause, broken hy Celin's sohs. Touched, I was using my pocket handkerchief behind the door. My neels's volce, when he spoke again, sounded ominiously familiar.

"You will excues me if I leave you eow.
This intelligence has stunned me completely. If true—"

"It's all true," she declared. "Ask manma."
"Your word suffices," he saldhastily, and mamma."

"Your word suffices," he said hastily, and "Your word suffices," he said hastily, and left the house.

I estantly I duried from my hiding place to the assistance of my promised aent, prostrate on the sofn.

"Cella—auet, be comforted," I implored.

"Naver," she reterned. "I'll hreak my heart—it'll serve mother oet."

How alleviate her distress! Presectly come n brisk ring nt the door, and in tripped Mrs. Pierpout, home from shoppieg. Oee glance at this pretty, careless, frisky, irresponsible-looking matron, the contents of whose brain, I suspect, were mainly thistie down, explained mech. Full of her perchases she hegan, without syen noticing me:

perchases she hegan, without sven noticing me:

"Celia, I've seen your wedding dress. Just like a poet's dream, dear."

"Wedding dress!" echoed Celia, bitterly.

"Would it were."

"You won't be wanting to wear it everlastingly," roplied Mrs. Plerpont, mismaterstanding her. "And I've composed the loveliest white peur cuirass."

"Hush," oried Celia, fractically. "I wish I'd never seen Hamprion; ever left Americal Never heen hora! it's all your doing."

"Of course it is," said Mrs. Pierpont, complacently. "I brought you over expressly to afford you the opportunity of merrying an English gentleman—your ideal, you said."

"A libely thing." Colin hitterly re-an English gentleman—your ideal, you said." A likely thing," Colin hitterly responded, "that an English gentleman would marry a girl of my humble extraction. No use, mother, I know all, all; so does Rich—Mr. Grimston, and he's gone, leaving me hranded as an advectures." Mrs. Pierpont, very slightly disconcerted, looked around as if seeking an escape. Herevo fell upon me.

Aris. Pierpont, very singlely discolored around as if seeking in escape. Her eye fell upon me.

"Who is that young man!" she inquired.

"Mr. David D'Anbigny," mourned Cella,
"my nephew that was to have been."

"He, then, is the informar agaiest ue."

"Mother, no; thunks to his generosity inlone, I was enabled to inform ingular my self—and spired the disgraceful fato you prepared for me."

Mrs. Pierpont began to sob.

"I did it for your good, Celin—ungrateful girl. No princess ser had a better education, and we moved in excellent society in New York. And, infter all, what did I tell you of Mr. Grimsten that was false! Your pina was evaluable civil servant, and his was the only pure buttor in Uniosapolis. I've no doubt the vine Howards spring from a hraceh of the Duke's family, though the proofs may he inaccessible. As to Mr. Plerpoet, who's been dend these twenty-four years, sileuce is golden, but this I must say, that he was unrivaled in the ooiffeur's art—"

Celia broke in vehemently i say, that he was unrivated in the coiffeur's art—"

Cella broke in vehemently!

"Mother, what mookevy! Isu'sit enough that von've decalved Mr. Grimsten, and broken my henrt!"

"That's right—turn against your own mother, who uever spoke or estrred hut for you. If the wedding had come off, I'd have gone back to America and never troubled you more. To think of that wedding drees wasted, and your traveling bag with the Initiale engraved; though certainly you might marry somehody elsa whose name begine with in G."

"Never. I shall go into a convent tomorrow, and die soon."

"The secue was novel and pathetio—mother, dangbter and intended nephew ming; ling their tears. A fresh ring mado us all start. A messenger brought Cella a letter from my unolo.

"Read it," she said. "I daren't."

I read aloud:
"Your confession, Cella, has shooked me greatly, but your frankuess tonches my heart. You are not responsible for the calling of your progenitors, nor for the deplorable error that left you mienformed. I do not choose that you should suffer andeservedly. The hand I offered in ignorance, I now extend te you in the fullest knewledge of your pedigree."

"That's acting litte in gentleman," began Mrs. Pierpont. Seile laterposed.

"Thank him, mother,"—signifying ms—
"Mr. David D'Aubigny, my nephsw that will be yet, tell me hew I can show my gratitude!"
I told her.
"When you become my aent, centrive to make peace between your hushaud and his sister."
"I will," she tersely roplied.

"I will," she tersely roplled.

I had heen sent down to mar the untch, and there I had made it, fast and sure! Should I ever pacify my mother, I wondered! Nevertheless, as I returned to Hamerton Grange, I repented nething.

Mrs. Pierpont kept her word. The very dey after the wedding she sailed, and subsequently marrind e banker—the genuine nricle this time, I em told.

Calla kept her word. The reconcillation she effected was speedy and complete. The richer by a transformed uncle, a charming eent and interesting little cousins, I have never even missed my lost "expectations."

Savit's the black vest that is buttonless, and the thread happens to be white; well, thank goodness, my lnk bottle will so discolor the whiteness of the thread that the man who made it would think be turned it out black. But all this don't bring up that needle; yesterday, while huating up my extra coliar hutwhile buating up my extra collar hut ton, I saw ueedles eaough to run s day in each month in Masonic Hall. family a year. Weii, I'm in a hurry, I guess I'li have to pin it again.

Thus muses the poor bachelor; and cursing his fate, he finds a pin and is gone. How happy he would be if some woman would take him in charge; but no, he has put it off too long, and now he is too settled in his habits to even think of a change in his life except occasionally to broad over it as one of the impossibilities. A bachelor has sometimes a happy beam failing across his path when he visits some lady friends, and after leaving he feels a slight hope tugging at his heart strings that all chances are not yot goue; but he goes ou with bis life and his way of living and the sunshine gradually shuts itself from out his heart. his heart.

Once in awhile some old-time chum, now married and a happy husband and father, insists on his leaving his restaurant dinner for one day and diniag with him in his family circle. The bacholor onjoys this. He hangs out against going at first; but when he sees the little chaps clamber to the sees the little chaps clamber to the father's knee, and watches the beam of pride in the father's eyes as he kisses each chubby chock, he is real glad that Bob was, kind enough to ask him, and hopes to have many dinners with Roberdotermines when the little ones have many families around to approach become fumiliar enough to approach and kiss bim, that he will cultivate Boh more than he has done. He is tickied at the childish woader with which the little rosy-faced ones gaze at hiar, and their uacle, that he may worm himself into their good graces the easier. He remembers a lot of advertising pictures be stuffed into his pocket a day or two since; they are brought out and one by one the children are bribed to his knee.

Bob's wife is a nice, gentle badw worm days. Bob's wife is a nice, gentle body, very domestic, and a model wife, whom Bob loves dovotedly, and who loves Bob to distraction. Bob don't say so, but you can see it. He bas a pleasant time and a real nice dinner. Not so varied, oossi hly, as the one be left untasted at the restaurant, but so much more palatahie.

He tbinks that he hasn't enjoyed a dinner before in ever so long, and is ronly sorry he must go, but he must. He has chatted with Bob and his wife aud bables, through two of Bob's oig'ars, and now he must turu his hack on this cheerful family circle and get back to his bachelor den.

Truly, to-night it is more of a den Truly, to-night it is more of a den than over hefore—cold, blenk and so cheerless. Mr. Backelor thinks for awhile, then goes to bed, lies awake for an hour thinking of Boh's happiness, and of his own unhappiness, and wonders if he should marry would his home be equally as happy. Would it? There's the doubt, the nneertainty—he's free now, why not remain so? now, why not remain so?

Then disgusted and disgruntled he determines that he will never again go determines that he will never again go to Bob's, for this visit has aimost unsettled him, and surely made him envious.
No, he'll endure his lot. Then in his sleep, Bob and Bob's happiness, as well as bis own misery, are forgetten.
Look out, boys, and don't put it off too long. My bachclor experience is about the average.—Pech's Sun.

A GREAT PROBLEM Can I Make My Farm Pny?"-Wise Suggestions by a Farmer, This is a question that many thoughtful farmers are asking themselves, without any definite answer. With all farm products unusually low, and luber as high as ever known (except during the wur), it would look as if failure to make the farm pay expenses, to say nothing about a profit, must be the inevitable result. It is better to look at whatever difficulties we have to encounter, and to realize their full magnitude, than to make light of them, and finally mest them. That produce is low and labor high, are facts we can not change as high, are facts we can not change as ladividual farmers. But by being wide-awake to every thing connected with our calliag, we can do much to change the circumstances, so that we can see a profit in the near future, if not at present. Let us bear in mind that the same problem confronts every business man at times—how shall 1 pay expenses, and, if possible, make profit!

The first remedy I would suggest, is to farm more on a plan—to anticipate a coming demand for certain articles of produce, and have them ready for of produce, and have them ready for sale at the right time. When every farmer is engaged in producing some particular product, it is then too late. The only way by which we can intelligently anticipate a demand, is by reading carefully the facts in regard to it, and these at present are far in advance of what our fathers had to guide them. To illustrate, as far as we are enabled to judge from all the information at baml, it would be safe for any farmer who has had experience, and has suita-ble feed for which he has no particular use, to invest moderately in sheep— and this applies as well to many other things. One argument is, they are cheap; another, that a farm upon which sheep are made a specialty can be carried on with less hilp than any other. The only way to lower the be earried on with less halp than any other. The only way to lower the price of labor, is to lessen the demand.

We are too much inclined to plan as our fathers planned. This will not do the world has moved, things have changed, living expenses are mach more. Taxes are on the increase overy year, and we must have more to sell to cet them, or failure will be the result. labor, let us study to have it well-ilithere. It is well known that some men run prices up to satisfactory limits whenever they were reached in the sales. As high as $13.75 was paid for a hogshead of New and a comparatively large number ranged from $10.00 up. Yet the great bulk of offerings were Trash to Common Leaf, and bilding was no more active than in previous weeks. One lot of 11 hogsheads averaged $11.04, selling from $10.00 to $13.00.

THE LOUISVILLE MARKET.

All styles were well supported during the entire week except dark lugs too low in quality or too much out of order for the Spanish buyer. This grade is probably a ½ or ½ cent lower. Medinin, good and best grades of Burloy, rejected for the past few days, show an advance of 1½ to 2½ cents. While the market ean hardly be quoted that much higher on this sort it certainly shows greater strength and fully 1 to 1½ cents higher.

Quite a good uumber of hinds, of good Burley have brought from 9 to 14 cents. No fine Burleys offering. They would bring from 15 to 20 cents, the latter for very fine.

The skrinkage on a crop of grain that might be sold in the fall, by holding it until spring or later, by loss in weight, and destruction by rats and mice and other causes, Is far more than most farmers realize. The keeping of a horse or horses for which you have no waste the amount of feed and care on the horse.—Cor. Country Gentleman, The inquisitive Jap. The Japanese excel us in politenesa and in inquisitiveness. Their politeness demands such forms that to us it is wearisome, and their inquisitiveness is both amusing and troublesome. Recently I was on a trip in the country and some men sent to my reom in the hotel six or seven line eggs. It is quite usual for visitors to bring a present tho first time they come. A few minutes later three visitors came and asked some hard questions, viz: "There is oil in the monntain, how shall we get it out? How clean it? How can we make cotton out of straw? How will we get wax from fish oil? How can we get sugar out of turnips?" I did not answer all those questions, nor others they asked ue; but in the conversation, when I told them that the earth revolved around the sun, they looked at each other in utter dis-belief and pity.—Cor.
